Urban Transport:
A Little Less Conversation, a Little More “Appropriate” Action

Australia is a highly urbanized society and our urban transport systems are straining to accommodate the demands being placed on them. Fundamental questions need to be answered. What is real value for money? How much of recent political decision making in relation to investment in transport infrastructure has been counter to the public interest? Expect a controversial perspective from this year’s Ogden Lecturer.

David Hensher is Professor of Management and Founding Director of the Institute of Transport and Logistics Studies (ITLS) at The University of Sydney. He is also System-wide Director of the National Key Centre in Transport Management (comprising ITS (Monash) and ITLS(Sydney). David is an Honorary Fellow of the Singapore Land Transport Authority and a Past President of the International Association of Travel Behaviour Research (IATBR). He has published widely and is the recipient of numerous awards including the 2009 IATBR Lifetime Achievement Award and the 2006 Engineers Australia Transport Medal for lifelong contribution to transportation.
